He is also the editor at Advantage Publishing, which publishes "HOME: Living in the Heart of Florida."

Prior to opening his agency, David was a Public Information Officer for the Florida Department of Community Affairs/Division of Emergency Management where he wrote and produced news releases, annual reports and special publications. He also responded to media inquiries and organized special events. David also spent 13 years as a newspaper reporter and editor in Miami and Gainesville. As a journalist, he covered government, community, education, law enforcement, crime and business.

He is an active board member with AMIkids Gainesville, a non-profit charitable organization that offers education, discipline and guidance to Alachua County's troubled youth since 1991. (Over 70 percent of AMIKids graduates have no further law violations!) He also does pro-bono work for AMIkids, Eastside High School (where his daughter is a 9th grader) and is a Board Member for Congregation B'nai Israel.
